🔍 What 28 Years Has Taught Us To Look For

This week let's talk about what 28 years has taught us to look for.
One of the biggest surprises over the years is that the problems that end up costing homeowners the most money rarely start out looking serious.
Most begin as small warning signs.
A failed caulk joint.
Minor paint separation.
Early moisture exposure.
A slightly weathered piece of trim.
A small section of wood beginning to soften.
The challenge is not finding these problems once they become obvious.
The challenge is recognizing them early enough that they can be addressed before they become larger repairs.
Most homeowners don't actually have a painting problem.
They have a trust and process problem.
The paint itself is often the easy part.
Knowing what needs attention before the paint is applied is where experience matters.
After nearly three decades of projects across Downriver and Metro Detroit, we've learned that many of the longest-lasting projects have one thing in common:
The right decisions were made early.
Before the coating failed.
Before the wood deteriorated.
Before moisture found its way deeper into the structure.
Before small repairs became major repairs.
Those are often the moments that determine how a project performs years later.

💡 Pro Tip
Many exterior failures are visible long before they become expensive.
Pay close attention to:

• Caulk separation around windows and doors
• Horizontal trim surfaces that hold moisture
• Paint cracking at joints and seams
• Deck attachment points and stair connections
• Areas that receive heavy sun exposure
Small warning signs often provide the opportunity to solve problems while solutions are still simple.

✨ Bonus Tip
The best-looking projects years later are often the projects where the homeowner never allowed small problems to become major ones.
Consistency almost always outperforms shortcuts over time.

Right now, exterior and deck schedules across Metro Detroit are beginning to compress quickly as summer approaches.
And this is usually the point in the season where preparation quality starts separating long-term projects from short-term projects.

🎨 Interior Painting & Cabinet Refinishing

Interior painting and cabinet refinishing projects continue to remain one of the best ways to improve a home while keeping larger seasonal scheduling decisions flexible.

Controlled environments, proper preparation, and premium coatings continue to be the foundation of smooth finishes and long-term durability indoors.

As exterior scheduling tightens toward summer, many homeowners are using this window to complete interior projects before outdoor timelines become more weather dependent.

🎨 Exterior Painting

Long-term exterior performance is usually determined before the finish coats are ever applied.

Proper washing, stabilization, sanding, priming, and surface evaluation all play a major role in how the final system performs once Michigan weather cycles begin working against the home again.

When those early stages are rushed, even high-end products can begin showing wear and failure much sooner than homeowners expect.

The projects that look the cleanest years later are usually the ones where preparation was never rushed at the beginning.

🪵 Deck Season Is Tightening Further

Deck restoration projects often require far more preparation than homeowners initially expect.

Old coatings, uneven exposure, UV breakdown, moisture absorption, and previous product failures all affect how new sealers absorb and perform moving forward.

Proper cleaning and preparation are what allow a deck system to age more evenly and maintain a more consistent appearance over time.

Twenty-eight years later, the products may change.

The colors may change.
The styles may change.
But the fundamentals remain the same.
Proper preparation.
Clear communication.
Patience when it matters.
Those are still the things that separate projects that last from projects that simply get finished.

Precision. Changes. Everything.
